House Passes UGEQ Mandate

SAC Executive To Apply For UGEQ Membership

An emergency session of the Lower House yesterday afternoon mandated the Student Administrative Council to seek membership in l'Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec. A motion to this effect was passed by a vote of 11 for, one against and two abstentions.

A Loyola delegation will attend the UGEQ Congress in Quebec City next week and present a brief stating Loyola's position. Their decision will have to ratified by the Lower House.

SAC President John Collyer emphasized that "we have reservations about joining." He enumerated such problems as finances, dual membership in the Canadian Union of Students and the UGEQ, and unilingualism in the UGEQ.

Legally Bound

At present the UGEQ constitution specifies that no member can belong to two national student unions and that the official language of the union will be French.

The CUS campus chairman, Peter Maloney, stated at the meeting that Loyola cannot leave the CUS until the 1966 Congress. He also noted that Loyola is legally bound to pay this year's 65¢ per student fees to the CUS.

Collyer suggested that in

The following is the exact text of the UGEQ motion:

2. The Loyola Executive be mandated to seek membership in l'Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec, subject to ratifica-tion by this House."

light of these problems, Loyola might be granted some sort of special dual membership for the coming year.

The UGEQ Vice-President, Richard Guay, stated at the meeting that Loyola's joining the UGEQ would be "mutually beneficial" to both parties in-

Regional Units

He explained that Loyola, as all colleges in the UGEQ would fit into a regional unit, which is presently being formed. He also noted that universities are separate regions in themselves.

SAC Vice-President for External Affairs, André Morazain, said that Loyola would be the strongest member in its region.

Explaining the UGEQ's position on dual membership, Guay said that Loyola could have "all the relations in the world" with the CUS, but could not have membership.

Discussing the UGEQ's unilingualism, he said, "Bilingualism is reserved for a few inis impossible."

Comfortable Disinterest

If ever Loyola students had an opportunity to prove themselves truly worthy of a college education it would be during next week's National Student Day. The purpose of the day is to present the issues of universal accessibility and free education in as clear a perspective as possible. The day will provide the student body with the best possible opportunity of viewing these crucial issues from both points of view and will enable them to formulate some definite opinion on these subjects. And this opportunity has presented itself at just the right time.

For, up to now, too many Loyola students have chosen to ignore the problems of higher education, problems which they seem to think do not concern them. Most, of course, will agree with the principle of universal accessibility. But that is where they choose to close discussion. Whether they are for or against free education does not seem to have crossed their minds.

It is apparent that this group has ignored all the implications behind these issues. The majority of students presently attending the college have experienced little difficulty in financing their own education. And because of this, too many of them have adopted the selfish attitude that since this problem does not concern them then they should not bother with it.

But what is to say that they will not be confronted by financial difficulties in the future? And what of their children? Now is the time to become involved in these issues. Not when it is too

Canada is supposedly in the midst of a new student movement, with students becoming involved more closely with current issues. It appears, however, that this movement has been bypassed by the majority of Loyola students. They seem content to stay where they are.

This attitude of disinterest must be removed if Loyola students wish to fulfil their roles as college students. The time has past when students can ignore those matters which they feel don't concern them.

And any issue which involves university life or anything connected with it deserves some consideration on the part of the students. It is in their better interests to become involved in such matters. This is the case with National Student Day.

The Embarassing Element

Dear Sir:

Last evening I had the opportunity of attending the showing of The Great Escape in the Main Auditorium. I took the opportunity and now regret having done so.

My wife, who had seen the film and recommended it, accompanied me. We arrived about five minutes before the showing and I was pleased to meet many former students in the audience. As the movie began there was the usual round of claps, hoots and catcalls which subsided once the projectionist managed to focus the film properly.

All went well until intermission. Then, during the second half of the film, a strange and disturbing change took place. From various parts of the audience there emanated sporadic remarks which ranged from the asinine to the obscene, I could sense wife's embarassment and could well imagine the discomfort felt by the others ladies present. My growing shame was mitigated by my belief that someone in authority would ask these boys (the term 'men' is totally inapplicable here) to leave. But nothing happened. It just went on and on.

I did manage to locate one of these addle-brained indiiduals and resolved to have a few words with him at the conclusion of the film. Meanwhile, I was still hoping that an usher, an upper classman or a serious classmate would get to him first. Such was not the case.

And so, when the lights went on, I cornered this oaf and we had a little chat. His only remark (mind you, it was not a defence) was: "I paid my 50 cents." Freedom of speech? Yes. But do 50 cents entitle him to totally disregard the rules of propriety and dethe most important decision which has faced it since its inception a few years ago. Within the next year, the SAC will have to make up its mind as to whether Loyola's interests can best be represented through the Canadian Union of Students or l'Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec.

The ideal situation would seem to be to belong to both these student unions. Yet, from recent statements made by members of the UGEQ executive, it is doubtful whether that union will change its constitution to allow a member to belong to both of the national student unions in Canada.

McGill and Marianopolis have already made their choice: they prefer the UGEQ over the CUS. But from yesterday's Lower House meeting, it seems apparent that a number of members favour the

To put the matter to the student body in the form of a plebiscite or referendum would be irresponsible, unless a thorough education program on both unions was first carried out. Deciding such a question is not like approving a constitution, which contains all

Both unions obviously have both their advantages and disadvantages. The UGEQ has more power in Quebec than the CUS, and education is a provincial responsibility. But the Loyolans would probably feel more at home in a CUS Congress than at a UGEQ Congress because of the inherent differences between the French and English in Canada. And so on, down the line, both unions have their strong and weak points.

These various factors will have to be weighed by each member of the Lower House, and each will have to decide which union will be best for Loyola's interests. It is not enough if only the SAC executive studies this important question and the Assembly takes their word on it; rather it is a responsibility which each member of the Assembly must personally assume within the next year.

It Takes Two...

Homecoming weekend at Loyola has meant very little to students in the past. This has largely been due to the fact that Homecoming has never had any appeal for the student body. Poor organization, or lack of same, has seen this yearly event planned with only the alumni in mind. Students were forgotten.

This year, however, the situation has been remedied. The student Homecoming committee has made a determined effort to widen the scope of events for the students. And in this attempt they have succeeded; the committee has planned at least four events which were never in the Homecoming program before.

However, this event needs more than organization and planing to make it the success it should be - it needs the support of every student. The committee has done its part, now the students must do the rest.

Free Education At Loyola

The recent proposal of CUS to abolish tuition fees has become major campus talk at most universities across Canada. It seems that to many a seriousminded student the issue is important enough to warrant intelligent and informative debate on both sides of the question. However, here at Loyola free education has become a dead issue. The big question is-why? Is it because Loyola students are so strongly self-satisfied with their present condition that they have lost all feeling of social awareness and commitment, or is it that they are simply too lazy to think about the problem? I wanted to find out the answer to this "why," and set about interviewing what I hoped to be a representative group on campus.

A Question Of Thought

My aim was not so much to find out whether the students were for or against free education, for it is assumed that everyone has some opinion. But rather I wanted to know to what extent they had thought about the problem, at all, and whether or not they had weighed both sides of the issue carefully before coming to a definite conclusion. The results were quite sur-prising. Most students told me that it was already a dead issue, and I shouldn't even bother questioning them.

Kathy Kasriel

As far as I can see, the issue was never very alive here. It had been used on one instant, as a point from which to voice personal opinions and on another to present some farce of a debate. As far as the NEWS is concerned, it presented one article and one editorial on the subject, plus two other news articles referring to the above mentioned instances - and none of this led to any sort of general student reaction.

To Arise Or To Dismiss

This is not to say that Loyelans should have risen en masse and marched to Ottawa to voice their opinions whether pro or con. On the contrary, student demonstrations rarely include a generally intelligent and mature forethought, that is, they do not seem to arise so much from rational thought as from emotional responses. But it is to say that the students here should not merely dismiss the issue as not concerning them, for it does concern them or at least it will, if at all they consider themselves for one moment a part of society.

Whatever decision the government makes, either the abolition of fees or continuing the present policy, will influence the progress of this country. this way, ultimately affect each and every one of them. Thus, it is in the interest of each student (since he seems so vitally concerned only with his own interests) that he examine the problems and consequences and both sides of the question before arriving at a better opinions I received from my in terviews. Dave McIninch of Arts IV maintained that he was against free education because "it kills the initiative of the student. If he has to work for it, he will appreciate it more.

A student in Commerce III agreed with this, and added that free education "will lower the value of the degree, since everyone will have one." A student in Arts II was neither dead for nor against the issue, but rather wanted to take a middle road. She stated that "it is not possible to have completely free education. This is too idealistic, but tuition costs should be kept at a minimum, say $200."

more worthy students could get aid.

Paul Tutsch in Engr. IV agreed that free education was not an economic possibility, but rather felt that the government reorganize its scholarship and bursary system, and give only to those people who need it and have a high enough percentage. A student in Arts I was opposed to this and maintained that some students simply were not able to afford university without free tuition. She said "if the ambition and aptitude is there, it should be made economically possible for everyone. One student in Science II was against this and said "anyone can go to college if you have enough gumption to work and sacrifice some things. Moreover, what we will pay for in taxes will amount to the same thing in fees, so what are we gaining?" Another student in Arts II was also against free education because "it makes the student social parasites. We will probably be looked down on even more than we are now.

An Arts IV student maintained that most people were against free educa-tion because "they do not realize the value of free education-it has to make its worth known. It must be sold like a product." Brian O'Conner also Arts agreed and added that "education has become a social necessity and society must pay for it. It is a historical phenomena, that must eventually be faced by any society.'

An Honors Math student, Mike Wheatly disagreed: "standards will be lowered - witness the American state universities. It comes from the taxpayers' pocket, and will come back to you eventually anyhow. Besides, 25% are capable of paying their own way and 50% are already receiving sufficient aid, and I can prove by a very simple set of equations that 25% + 50% = 100%therefore free education is not neces-

The Select Few

George Haynal of Arts III said he was for free education but only for those who have the need and the merit, "this would cut out freeloaders and still give good students a chance."
One Arts III student even admitted that he was against free education merely for the snob appeal.

Paul Marion of Arts IV said he was pro-capitalism and therefore necessarily against free education, "I resent any government delving into university business. It will destroy the freedom of the students.

Quite opposed to this view, Rick Monaghan of Arts II felt those against free education were merely voicing the opinions "of the moneyed young conservatives who are trying to build up their own position like any clique, nonothings, do-nothings, trying to convince themselves they're great guys."

Many of those interviewed could give some concrete opinions, but the sad majority who were confronted had nothing to say. Gerry Smith of Arts IV summed up the situation, "the reason for the complete apathy at Loyola is because free education would affect very few of the students presently en-rolled at our illustrious university. There are a lot of problems but I haven't really bothered to find them out yet." Not bothering seems to be a Loyola dilemna; in fact, I wonder how many students have even bothered to read this.

'Ship of Fools" is the most recent of Hollywood films to present a cast of international movie stars. Current films in the trend are 'The Yellow Rolls Royce' and 'Those Magnificent Men . . .' both of which present a phalanx of European and American acting notables. 'Ship of Fools' is a better film than the other two and will consequently be a more popular one because of a better script.

Based on Catherine Anne Porter's novel of the same name, the plot chronicles the passage of a second class passenger ship on its way from Veracruz to Bremerhaven in the year 1931. What almost ruins 'Ship of Fools' is its message or, more explicitly, the way the message is presented. The director, Stanley Kramer, seems quite intent on ramming the message home with the force of a thousand Anacin commercials.

The dominant theme is that of the injustice of social prejudice doubly emphasized by a somewhat heavy handed irony. The negro-hating American, a bigoted German who dislikes Jews solely for the sake of convenience, social class distinction, exemplified by the presence of several hundred sweaty South American peons on the deck of the ship, all these are exemplars of an ever widening ring of race and social prejudice. All this is in bas-relief to the terrible irony that the ship is heading for Nazi Germany and that the greatest foolishness of all is yet to come.

The second theme is the more personal one of loneliness. All of them lead a sort of negative existence and all are trying to find some sort of meaning to their lives. It is here that the director is most successful in allying this personal struggle for meaning with the more grandiose theme of social injustice. Their tragedy lies perhaps in the fact that despite their individual moral baptisms of fire, they emerge just as blind, just as lonely as before.

The acting was generally excellent but especially good were Oscar Werner, as the anguished, suicidal ship's doctor and Simone Signoret, as a declassée noblewoman fighting for every bit of life she can get.

Most were well behaved and, I am sure, as uncomfortable as we were. But as we left and my wife said something to the effect that she was not impressed (she was trying to spare my feelings!), I noticed this potential recipient of Free Education slipping a jacket over his scrawny shoulders. The jacket bore the old and honourable name of LOYOLA.

A. G. Drolet, Professor, Loyola High School.

National Pride And Flagpoles

Dear Sir:

A glaring example of the apathy that plagues Canadians in general is daily evident on our campus. I refer to the fact that since the red Maple Leaf flag was first raised at Loyola in February of this year as the sole national emblem of our country, it has made only sporadic appearances atop the flagpole reserved for it. From sunrise to sunset that white, mast-like monstrosity stands stark naked and forlorn, like a reject from an eighteenth century shipbuilding yard. If we are going to let that well-postured piece of wood stand there without its proper adornment, I suggest that we connect it to the nearest clothes-line, or that we paint it with barber stripes, or set up a model community of bird-houses, or try our hand at totem carving. At present it remains ugly and meaningless, an eyesore reminding us of our basic carelessness about putting up even a rudimentary appearance of national loyalty or Surely one of the Security Guards or a member of the Canadian Affairs Committee or someone who is on campus early in the morning could see to it that this supposed symbol of our Canadian identity is displayed, for our own benefit and for that of visitors and passers-by. How else are we to become proud of our noble Maple Leaf or of the young and promising homeland that it represents?

Endgame: A Primaqueera Enigma

Endgame:

Directed and designed by Robert Buckland.

Cast:

Hamm Peter Jobin Robert Buckland Clov Nagg Richard Graham Nell Christine Reynolds

"Endgame" by Samuel Beckett is a play particularly characterized by a profound sorrow for the human condition. This sorrow (not sympathy, for the author is a part of it too) is also manifest in "Waiting for Godot" and is indicative of Beckett's view of

God vs. Cosmos

Beckett's man is the existential one. Loss of faith in the absolute, of Goodness, beyond himself, of the identification of the cosmos with God, of the ethical ideal, all these have placed upon man the greatest anguish he has ever known. His anguish is so great it supercedes his faith in himself and therein lies his tragedy. His despair, then, is not having to make decisions; the decision is made, the sense of loss can never overcome his personal freedom.

A Sombre Nihilism

The character Hamm expresses his own meaninglessness when he says: "We're not beginning to . . . to . . . mean something?"

Clov: "Mean something! You and I, mean something!

Ah, that's a good one! And the sombre pessimism of Hamm:

. "Last night I saw inside my breast. There was a big sore."

Clov: "Pah! You saw your heart."

Hamm: "No, it was living." Then amidst all this desolation,

by Dave Ryan

hate and despair, you're struck with the horrible thought that this, after all, is the sum total of man's existence and that he has come dirty and fitful to the end of the game.

Structurally, "Endgame" moves in a circle. The brief tableaux at the beginning and the end of the play are identical. The play moves from non-movement to action and back to nonmovement. Yet there is no progression and no regression. Humanity has come to a shuddering halt and, as in "Godot," one is left with the feeling that this little drama will recreate itself tomorrow and on into infinity, an endless vicious circle.

Loutish Lusts

Beckett is a great playwright and poet but if you are of a more progressive nature, you might find solace in this emotive quotation of Sean O'Casey against the Theatre of the Absurd: "Ah. t'hell with the loutish lusts of primaqueera."

Robert Buckland who designed the set and directed the play did well on both. The almost cavernous design and colours of the decor is most effective in creating an atmosphere of desolation. His direction is sensitive and succeeds in sympathizing the main characters, Hamm and Clov. His characterization of Clov was strong from the opening pantomine.

Bleached Diller

Peter Jobin as Hamm was a particular standout. His acute sense of timing succeeded in evoking meaning from the many subtleties of Beckett's lines. Richard Graham, who, as Nagg, looked like a bleached Phyllis Diller, and Christine Reynolds handled their parts well. "Endgame" has been extended to play tonight and tomorrow night at the new McGill Student Union on McTavish St.

Whatever became of:

Lucy Borgia,

It is a tribute to our Home Ec. course that the name of this little girl is celebrated wherever food is eaten and wine is drunk. Lucy, early in her course, gave unmistakable evidence that food to her was not merely a means to an end but an end in itself. Herself a sparing eater, she encouraged guests to enjoy each meal as if it were their last. With a few simple ingredients, Miss Borgia could produce a banquet to end all banquets. Her Omelette a la Fine Toadstools is still talked about in hushed voices. The few contemporaries who survived her, often recalled this gentle lady diligently tending her little kitchen garden of Deadly Nightshade, Foxglove and Hemlock. You don't find cooking like Lucy's in the college cafeteria these days.

McGill Indians Scalp Braves

The football Braves will journey to the Eastern Townships tomorrow for a return engagement with Sherbrooke University. In their previous encounter the two teams battled to a 13-13 sawoff.

But the big story for the Braves concerns not tomorrow's encounter but rather following week. their surprise loss last weekend at the hands of the Mc-Gill Indians.

The Tribe was upset 11-7 by played on the soggy surface of Forbes Field. A measure of the defeat's surprise proportions can be found in the fact that the University of Montreal Carabins, who had edged the Braves

18-17 in the season's opener, swamped the Indians 70-7 the McGill got off to a fast start midway through the first quarter when flanker Dave Fleizer and quarterback Robin McNeil combined for a 50-yard pass and the revamped Indians in a game run touchdown. Charlie Nims converted for the Indians.

> No points were added to the scoreboard until the six-minute mark of the third quarter. After the Braves had stalled a McGill drive, Nims clicked on a 25-yard field goal attempt from directly in front of the uprights.

> The Braves finally hit the scoresheet in the final stanza when fullback Brian Corbett capped a 90-yard drive slanting off tackle from the six-yard line for a major. Courville's convert was good

> The Indians then concentrated on controlling the ball and Phil Fontanetta put the game away by booting a single from the Loyola 35.

Penalties literally killed the Braves. A 70 -yard touchdown play by George Horobjowsky was called back because of an offside penalty. Another long gainer was nullified by a holding penalty.

For tomorrow's game, Coach Ross Buckle plans no major changes and feels that with just a little more effort the Braves could finally break into the win column. In the three previous starts the Braves have been stimied each time.

Warriors Lose, Welcome Lutheran

Before last Saturday's game in Waterloo, a few of the play-ers on Loyola's football Warriors were heard to express lighthearted fears concerning the aerial route that the team would take to get to this Ontario city. Since the two hour flight ran smoothly and therefore, was uneventful, many a sigh of relief was heard.

Little did the Warriors know that an air catastrophe was lurking just around the corner, and not because of any airplane either.

The Waterloo Warriors jumped on a new defensive formation employed by Loyola Warriers and literally passed the visitors to death, romping to a 32-19 win and practically eliminating the Maroon and White's aspirations for any title shot either in the Ontario Intercollegiate or Ottawa St. Lawrence Football Conference.

The defeat, squaring Loyola's won-lost record at 2-2, placed the Warriors four points behind the still undefeated Ottawa Gee Gees and Carleton Ravens who are deadlocked for the leadership. With only three games left for each team in the schedule only a minor miracle could give the Warriors the cham-

However, Loyola is still aiming for a first division finish and they take a major step towards that goal when they oppose the rugged Waterloo Lutheran Golden Hawks in tomorrow's Homecoming contest scheduled for 2 p.m. on campus.

The new defense that led to the Warriors' downfall last Saturday was called a six-one blitz, consisting of a six-man line and one rover plus five deep backs. This left the Warriors vulnerable to the short pass and, as things turned out, proved also very confusing to the defensive halfbacks. Waterloo quarterback Doug Billing, scrambling barely away from clawing and inept Loyola tackling, passed for three first half touchdowns and 193 total yards as well as completing crucial second down and yardage situations to provide the Ontario university with a 19-7 lead at the interval.

The Warriors' touchdown came on a pass from quarterback John Lemieux to halfback Hughie Adams for a 45yard play. Adams broke two tackles and outsped another defender in scoring the major, which at the time narrowed the Waterloo lead to six points. Cass Quinn booted his first convert of the year.

The Warriors' defense, including the secondary, tightened in the second half by reverting to the standard fivefour formation, but the damage had been done. However, Cass Quinn brought one last ray of hope for victory to the Warriors, combining with Lemieux for a 75-yard pass and run play, sparked by a key block thrown by end Dave Wilson which wiped out a pair of pursuing Waterloo linemen.

In the fourth quarter the hosts scored two more majors, one on a concerted drive capped by a Doug Mitchell plunge for the score, and the other on what turned out to be a "thirteen point play." With Loyola threatening on Waterloo seven yard line halfback Bill Sheasgreen had the ball knocked out of his hands by a vicious tackle and the pigskin plopped right lineman Ed McMenamin who struggled 103 yards for paydirt. The convert was good, and instead of Loyola notching a possible six points on play Waterloo scored the seven.

into the welcome arms of Linebacker Dave Shelly narrowed the foregone result late in the game as he intercepted a lateral and raced 50 yards for a TD.

Ineffective tackling hurt the Warriors in the early going of the contest, coupled with an untried defensive setup. The offense performed as well as in any game this season and quarterback Lemieux in particular enjoyed his most productive sixty minutes of football.

Tomorrow's game promises to be a spirited battle as nearly 5000 fans are expected to attend. A parade with floats will highlight Homecoming Weekend followed by the game.

Among the Hawks that pose a threat to Warrior fortunes are quarterback Don Wilson, halfback Ed Turek, a league All-Star last year and fullback John Watson. Coach Bob Celeri's squad stresses toughness, as witnessed by last season's game when a total of two broken ankles and a broken nose was suffered during the battle.

Pucksters Stronger Than Ever

The Loyola hockey riors team under rookie head coach Al Grazys have begun practices in quest of the Otta-St. Lawrence League championship which just eluded them last year.

The Maroon and White lost a powerful Sir George Williams team in overtime of the championship game last spring and it appears that another strong Georgian entry will again afford the major obstacle for the Loyola pucksters.

The Warriors are expected to ice their strongest team in seasons as only three members of last year's squad are not returning, goaltender Gord Pallet and high-scoring forwards Bob Shaughnessy and Gord Lackenbauer, who this year coach the junior Varsity Braves.

In goal, the Warriors have veteran Bruce McKay returnby Dave McPhillips

ing and they expect to have no problems between the pipes. Loyola High School product Brian Hughes as well as Nick Natale, Bill McNa-mara and Andrea Molino are the other candidates for the alternate goaltending position.

Up front the Warriors should be able to ice three well-balanced scoring units. Rick Dawson, Kev Healy, Dave Hedgecoe, Bruce Kelly, Gerry McGrath, Jacques Guevremont, J. P. Robitaille, Tony Tyrrell and Conni Nucci are all returnees from last year's finalists. These veterans along with several newcomers should give Loyola plenty of offensive punch.

Roger Wilding, former Metro League Junior sensation is expected to be the biggest addition but other promising hopefuls include Thomas from Loyola High School's Senior "AA" championship team; Mike Griffin from St. Lambert's Junior "B" team; and Peter Morin from the Lachine Maroons.

Peter Quelch, a two year veteran who sat last season out, will attempt to regain his position on the Varsity team and his return to form would definitely benefit the club.

The defense, however, is the question mark. George Lackenbauer, the Conference All-Star and team's Most Valuable Player in 1964-65, is back for his final year. With the exception of Lackenbauer, though, the Warriors had what was probably the worst defense in the league last season. Newcomers Ray Bouchard from the Hamilton Red Wings of the Junior OHA and John Kubacki from the high school should both snatch a position on the roster.

Veterans Roy Riley, who showed steady improvement last year, Ed Maloney, Ian McKay and Jim Cullen will be hard-pressed to retain their berths. An improved defense is a necessity if the Warriors have any hopes of winning the championship this season.

With the Warriors' veteran aggregation and the addition of four or five promising newcomers there is certainly reason for optimism in training camp. This abundance of talent along with the pride which the Warriors developed in the playoff game last year could combine to bring Loyola its first OSL hockey championship since the productive years of 1952-60, when the team recorded nine straight

Although Bishops rarely threatened after the opening fifteen minutes, Loyola had a hard time clicking on the scoring plays. The first half was almost over when inside-forward Frank Williams' shot to the corner of the net gave the team a one-nil halftime lead. Loyola dominated the play in the second half. Centreforward Carlo Arena, who saw limited action due to an injured foot, took the ball on a cross pass from the wing and pushed it past the 'keeper for the second goal soon after the second-half whistle.

Bishops was penalized soon after when an eager fullback handled on the goalline and Captain Andy Onorato scored on the penalty. Minutes later he scored his second goal to put the Warriors four up. Reserve forward Rene Bersma finished the scoring when he deflected Onorato's shot for number five.

The Warriors must win their next two games if they are to take the championship. This Saturday the team travels to Ottawa to meet the Carleton Ravens in what promises to be a hard match. Carleton's only loss this season was a default to McGill. The following Friday the as yet undefeated RMC Redmen meet Loyola in Montreal for what could be the OSL Cup Final to determine the league champion.

On The Warpath

By Ray Taras

The Saga Of Seagram Stadium

I should never have gone to Waterloo. I would never have had these grandiose and inflated ideas in my head. The football game was a crowd-pleaser and the cheerleaders were plums but what struck any visitor most had little to do with the manner with which footballs or women are played.

It wasn't the strength of the opposition that caught my eye, though I must say I was impressed with the average age of the team, twenty-one, which was balooned by two players who were twenty-six years old, specifically the top quarterback and firststring halfback. And it wasn't the huge crowd that filled the stands, totaling a few thousand, nor was it the fact that the game was being televised live on a local public television station, that impressed any tourist most.

It was fabulous Seagram Stadium and it was what really lay behind the simple material construction of the park itself that has captured my fancy. Not that it was in any respect comparable to McGill Stadium; it wasn't in this that lay the true value of the building. But what did place this Stadium in a unique and extraordinary position was that, in relation to the facilities that presently exist and will exist, it seems, for just that extra year or two too many to suit the revolutionary progressive student attitude current, at this Catholic classical College, and these are three strikes against us in a row, Loyola is left standing in the Stone Age.

For example, there were dressing rooms in Seagram Stadium. and plenty of them. They were large, had lockers, and also included showers that ran hot water. At Loyola what are referred to as dressing rooms are minute cubicles with rotting walls where if any one player should breathe out too heavily the space required for indulgence would start a chain effect which would finally see another player near the door go flying out for lack of room.

The Warriors were amazed to discover at Seagram that no rats scurried around under their feet while they dressed into working clothes. And the showers could be adjusted to run hot water, while at Loyola's Stadium a player is taking a desperate risk if he stands under the shower and turns the hot water valve on: ice cold water from the plumbing under the hockey ice may be what pours forth gently onto the player's already-toughened skin.

The playing surface of the field itself surprised the Warriors to no end. Instead of stumbling upon large clods of dirt the size of footballs gentle green grass grew where cleats of players trampled. There was a scoreboard that gave down and yardage before every play, had a clock and kept the score close in everyone's mind.

The Need For Adequate Facilities

Comfort for the spectators was as good as at any professional contest. Seats provided the gratifying coziness fans expect, and vendors of food and soft drinks were never too far away. Visibility to the field was excellent and there was absolutely no need for any one to stand up or lean over to get a better view of the proceedings on the field.

Perhaps the perfect playing weather in Waterloo was also one of the blessings of Providence. Unfortunately, Loyola has received no such blessing, so clergy please note. -

But then, let no one despair: the sports complex is never too far distant in the future; it is always just around the corner. Need one remember that former Athletic Director Jack Kennedy promised completion for October, 1965? Should not one forget that during summer the word was at least the gymnasium and dressing rooms would be finished for the coming athletic season? Is there any need to believe further promises?

The apparent delay, the explanation goes, stems ultimately from the Parent Report, that new Bible published last spring which concerns itself with education in La Belle Province. Honorable Jean Lesage, notre premier ministre, has decided no actions should be taken until a complete overhaul begins on the educational system in Quebec. Therefore, no monetary grants to Loyola until then.

But must anyone believe a politician? Lesage, that selfpronounced leftist, has done more to divide the French and English in this country than probably any other political leader, through his insistence on forever separating a French culture, God knows what that is, from the English culture; thus indirectly splitting the French fact from the Anglo-Saxon by demanding of the French that their identity should never perish, must be safeguarded at all costs, particularly from the anglais.

The matter of the sports complex rests now in the hands of the President of Loyola College. He has to make the decision as whether to begin work without Quebec's financial support or hold off until some greenbacks do pour in. Thus, entwined and submerged in the perilous quicksand of politics, the crying need for reasonable facilities to accommodate the Varsity and junior Varsity teams goes unanswered.

If adequate measures are not taken before the academic year 1966, one course remains open to Loyola: withdraw from the Ottawa-St. Lawrence Intercollegiate Conference until such time as these facilities are provided. It is the only course left so that Loyola College will not be further disgraced.

Gridiron Gossip And Grievances

With quite a few players having been banged around and being aided off the field in the game at Waterloo the necessity of acquiring a full time trainer for next season has been emphasized . During the week preceding the Waterloo game the Warriors strained through three tough scrimmages. Even worse, the Varsity were forced to scrimmage against the obviously-intimated junior Varsity team. For one thing, three scrimmages a week is uncalled for when the season has already reached its mid-way mark and secondly, any mismatch between two teams of different levels of competition will hinder both in morale . . . The Warriors' quarterback had an encounter with the Dean of Men on the plane; the Dean was rumoured to have muttered afterwards, "I should have expected it." . . One of the players asked Coach Apostolatos before the trip what would happen if the plane crashed. Apostolatos tartly replied, "Our record will be 2-2."

Arts IV Romps To Top Spot

With the intramural football season coming to a close the upper classmen his have so far dominated the spotlight. Arts IV, Arts III to Waterloo. and Science IV all shared this week's laurels.

Arts IV clinched the "A" league divisional title and must now await the outcome of the two Bruce McKay and Ed Giardino the senior paced Artsmen throughout the season and will instrumental in any repeat performance of last year's intramural grid champions.

Arts III currently remains undefeated atop the "B" section but faces stiff competition in remaining games. Any order for championship champagne should be held up until the class officially clinches the title. Led by Gary Brown, Wayne Commeford, Kev Healy and a solid defensive squad Arts III still remains in a commanding position to make the intramural finals.

Science IV proved to be the spoilers of the Science League when the team upset hitherto undefeated Science II. Thus the battle for top honors in this section will be waged till the final contest with the freshmen class also given a shot at the top position, along with senior and sophomore Science

In intramural tennis the first four matches of the first round have been run off and qualifying for the quarter-finals were Larry Carroll, Mike Watson, John Hamblin and Guy Lalonde. Four more matches are to be decided before next week.

The annual golf tournament was played Wednesday and Thursday under commissioner Don Miller. The Atlantic Handicap system will determine the eventual winner, and with this complex method final results will only be known next week.

For the second consecutive week the volleyball tournament has been postponed and it is hoped to complete the single elimination tournament before November 8th. On that date the hockey and basketball schedules will begin the lengthy race for top class honors in these sports.

Warrior Waterloo — Title Ambitions Die

Full Story On Page 9

The Loyola Warriors were bidding for sole possession of third place last Saturday when they travelled to Waterloo to meet the Warriors of that Ontario University. This game was a key to any hopes the team had of overhauling the league leaders. What resulted was a bitter defeat, and the Warriors' aspirations for top spot were crushed.
